DOWNEY QUESTIONS

Federal Employes Turn In Regular Accounts at Maximum Rate, Comptroller Finds.

Government accountants are asked to scrutinize the items covering baths taken by officials and clerks traveling at public expense, in a report made topense accounts such baths really were

"It is said that cleanliness is next to Godliness." Comptroller Downey said in passing upon the matter, "and far be it from me to advocate a vast 'army of the unwashed' in the Government service, but the prevalence of this item uninterruptedly in expense accounts under all varying conditions and always at the maximum figure, has given rise to the fear that the Government is unprecessarily putting temptation in the the fear that the Government is unnecessarily putting temptation in the way of its officers."

Comptroller Downey's attention was called to the question when he approved the action of the Auditor of the Treasury, in rejecting a claim of $2 for four baths charged by C. C. Wall, a special agent of the Treasury Department, traveling from New York to Savannah, Ga. After criticising Wall for taking four days at $10 a day on a trip which could have been made by rall in one day, Comptroller Downey took up the bath matter, and said that though one item of this kind was a small matter, when from the 1st to the 31st a bath was never missed, and that there charges were multiplied by the number of officers traveling at Government expense, the acorn develops into the oak. pense, the acorn develops into the oak.
"These things are said." Comptroller Bowney added, "that the occasion may be made apparent for treatment in serious departments, and that accountremarkably regular expenditure has in fact always occurred. The prevalent practice is giving rise to suspicion of an abuse of privilege. Other vouchers before me have contained the item of a cents a day for baths with unbroken regularity, irrespective of the fact that egularity, irrespective of the fact that in some localities baths may be cheaper than that sum."
